106 Years of Armenian Genocide

April 24 Newsletter

“ Tired, hungry, thirsty, with torn clothes, we were walking barefoot through a village. If I’m not mistaken, it was in the field of Moosh. Suddenly we saw water, and we all ran to the water as if gaining new strength. But before reaching the water, the Turks attacked us with horses, did not allow us to approach and drink the water. Those who could approach the water before drinking it were killed and thrown into the water. Turks said: “Drink as much as you want now.” We walked a little further from there and saw the excrement of horses on the ground. People literally “attacked” them, took out the barley, and tried to eat it. Still, they did it so that the Turks would not see it because it would be considered a great luxury for the Armenians if they saw it. They did not allow them to eat, and if they saw it, they beat them with batons or threw them under the hooves of the horses.”

The above excerpt is a story from the book my mother wrote based on what she heard from her mother – a survivor of Genocide.

This April, more than any other, we once again were proved right that the Genocide has never ended, as it continues to this day. Today, instead of Abdul Hamid or Talaat Pasha, the current-day perpetrators are called Erdogan and Ilham Aliyev. Different names, however, with the same aim, which is to destruct, deface the Armenian culture, replace our people, and erase any trace of us in history from everyone’s memory. They are determined to achieve it at all costs by emptying our homeland and destroying our heritage.

One hundred million Turks and Azeris backed by foreign mercenaries are seizing significant areas of Artsakh, committing war crimes, and killing thousands of Armenians while celebrating Armenian deaths. Artsakh’s survival, Armenia’s security, and the viability of our ancient Armenian nation are at stake.

We are facing a national crisis with an existential challenge. Nothing less. To complete their expansionist pan-Turkish dreams, now they target the Syunik region of Armenia, which Aliev says they will occupy whether Armenians want it or not. 106 years ago, the indifference of the international community caused the Genocide of Armenians and later the Holocaust of Jews. Will the indifference cause more genocides?
